Documentary Film: The Children of Terezin

Terezin was the Third Reich's "show-place" a model camp conceived for propaganda, by deceiving the world into believing that the relocation of millions of Jews did not mean they were being liquidated but "merely" resettled all over Europe. Terezin was also special, as it produced artists and poets who were part of an organized movement of resistance within the town. The resistance was accomplished through an extensive underground network of secret activities that encouraged and taught inmates to use the power of music, poetry and painting to document and expose the façade of the "paradise ghetto".

Following the film, Stewart Bernstein, a producer of the documentary, and JGSCV board member, will discuss the making of the documentary—the return to Terezin with a few of survivors, those young artists and poets who participated in the underground classes and played music in secret recitals. Stewart, has been in the entertainment industry for 30 years as a Producer, Director and Film Editor, and has twice been awarded National Emmys.
